

Men and Women with Horns.

Revue des Revues, Paris.

This phenomenon is more frequently met with than is generally believed. Such is the force of prejudice that nearly all of us would rather have two noses or four feet than the emblem which in bygone ages was considered the supreme ornament of man. It is in this view that horns are attributed to gods and heroes. Alexander the Great, when he proclaimed himself the son of Jupiter, gave orders that on the coins which should be struck thereafter he should be represented bearing horns. Michelangelo, when he made a statue of Moses, depicted the legislator with horns, as a sign of manly strength. The kings of India were wont to have horns attached to their helmets, as a mark of their supreme rank. The great gods like Jupiter, Pan, and even Astarte, the goddess of the Syrians, were represented with horns, as an indication of their mighty power. In the course of time the horn lost its significance, and ceased to be regarded as a mark of splendor, force and dignity.

M. Villeneuve has written a book in which he describes seventy-one cases of horned human beings. Fifty per cent. of these occurred in the cases of men who had the horns, like animals on the forehead. The statistics show that more women are horned than men, and the horns of women are usually longer than those of men. In the British Museum is the largest specimen of a human horn. It is eight inches in length, and ornamented the head of a noble Englishman. In the seventeenth century a Mrs. Allen, of Leicester, England, had a pair of horns, so far from being ashamed she was proud of them, and wore them as an ornament all her life. They attracted to her, it is told, numerous admirers. Another Englishwoman of the same town, known as the beautiful Mary Davis, had a pair of horns, which were regarded as an addition to her charms. She had them cut off four times; but they grew again. One grown was presented to King Henry IV. of France.

M. Lamprey and other travelers have told of people who number among them numerous specimens of horned men and women. These people are found in certain regions of western Africa. In 1887, M. Lamprey relates, he found in the African territory of Ganin several imposing types of horned men and women. One of these was a majestic looking negro with two horns, which in his case sprang one from each side of the nose. A Mexican named Rodriguez is described as having a horn on the side of his head, about seven inches long, with three branches like the horn of a stag.

Are horns hereditary? It would appear from the observations of the physicians who have carefully studied these excrescences that they are sometimes hereditary, though not as a general rule. M. Dublanc relates in the Journal de Pharmacie for 1830 that the Medical Society sent him for analysis three human horns, of which one was cut from the grandfather of the person who bore the other two. Animals that are not usually horned sometimes, like the human race, put forth unexpectedly a decoration of this kind. There are well authenticated cases of horns being found on dogs, horses and hares; and there is even one case related by a trustworthy physician of their being seen on a cat. What is the nature of this horn formation? According to Malpighi, whose opinion is entitled to great weight, horns are the nervous prolongation of the skin. Bieschov, another judge not to be despised, says they are due to a morbid secretion. Without entering into details on this subject, it may be said that it is agreed that in their essence human horns are analogous, in their substance, to the horns of animals, and not human horns, and the claws of beasts. Whatever it may be, these excrescences do not threaten either the health or the life of those who have them.

TREPANNING BY THE ANCIENTS.—The custom of trepanning, or taking small pieces of bone from the living head, was much practiced in prehistoric times, as the skulls prove to us, and is still in vogue among some peoples. Among these are the people of the Berber stock in the Djebel Aures and the Djebel Chechar of the edges of the Algerian plateau. The method of performing the operation is carefully described by Drs. H. Malbot and R. Verneau, of whom Dr. Malbot was shown by a native doctor a skull with more than a dozen circular holes, two slits, and a large irregular orifice, all of which had been pierced when the man was alive. The skull was kept hidden, and was evidently used as an amulet by the local doctors. The natives have recourse to trepanning for blows or wounds on the head; and it does not matter how long before the blow may have been given, if only the sick person can remember that he has had one. The operation is not severe. A woman, tired of her husband, is said to have called in the service of a trepanner in order to get a divorce from him by producing a piece of her skull and affirming that he had broken it in some of his cruel acts.—Apollon's Popular Science Monthly (U.S.)

FAITH HEALING IN ANCIENT GREECE.

Dr. Caton's lectures on the Temples and Ritual of Asclepius at Epidaurus and Athens are interesting in themselves as embodying a skillful reconstruction of one of the most pathetic ruins of antiquity, and also as affording a proof that even in these days of crowded scientific life there are still among us some worthy successors of the old race of scholarly physicians who found leisure for other studies in the spacious times when the art of medicine was neither so long nor so absorbing as it is at the present day. Dr. Caton has clothed the dry bones of archaeology with flesh and has enabled us not only to see in the mind's eye the buildings and material environment, but to understand the inner life, and, as it were, to breathe the spiritual atmosphere of the most celebrated temples of Asclepius, the god of healing. * * *

On arriving at the temple the suppliant was not suffered at once to enter. He had first to be cleansed by bathing in the sacred well, after which he was allowed to pay his homage to the deity of the shrine. He was then admitted to the altar, whereupon he placed cakes and choice articles of food as offerings to Asclepius, on whose behalf they were graciously accepted by the priest. Each suppliant had also to bring a supply of food and bedding for himself, the temple furnishing nothing beyond a heap of leaves for him to lie upon. At nightfall the sacred lamps were lighted under the porches, and propitiatory prayers were offered up by the priests with imposing ritual. The lights were then extinguished and the patients enjoined to compose themselves to sleep. Full of expectation of the promised visit of Asclepius, excited further by the solemnity of their surroundings, hypnotized by the lamps and made drowsy by the fumes of incense and the languorous atmosphere of the crowded temple, one after another passed into the land of dreams. It is to be wondered at if the poor sufferers, whose faith had been inflamed almost to delirium by the religious ceremonies, were visited by the god and told by him what they were to do to be made whole. It is not unlikely that the priests who had learnt from the patients on their arrival something at least of the nature of their complaints, had also suggested to them a line of treatment which would be confirmed by the vision. But what of those to whom sleep was denied, and to whom, therefore, no dream of healing could come? It may well be, as Miss Jane Harrison suggests, that for such cases in "the half dawn of the grey morning," when life is at its lowest daily ebb, some dream-like pageant was arranged by the priests, which was probably as effective as the dream. When the cure was accomplished, there naturally came the question of the fee, and the hardly less important one of the testimonial.

The poor gave earthenware vases or whatever else they could afford. Almost everyone who found relief presented an ex-voto offering in the form of a leg, arm, breast, or whatever part of the body might have been the seat of the disease which had been cured; these were often made of gold or silver.—British Medical Journal.

THE HOLY SHROUD.—Under the heading, "A Marvellous Occurrence," the Observatore Romano, the Pope's own official organ, published, on June 14, a letter from Turin relating that a photograph of the Holy Shroud, taken by electric light, has given an admirable reproduction of the body of Christ. The Holy Shroud was recently exposed to veneration, and King Humbert, who is its hereditary guardian, at first hesitated to give authority to have it photographed, lest the photographs should be used for purposes of commercial speculation. Eventually, however, his Majesty gave the requisite permission to Signor Secondo Pia, a lawyer, and member of the Committee on Sacred Art, who had offered to photograph the Holy Shroud at his own expense solely in the interest of religion and history. Signor Pia prepared his plates according to a special method, rendering them sensitive to the yellowish tint of the Holy Shroud by means of powerful electric reflectors. "Formerly," the letter continues, "the appearance of the Holy Shroud gave an idea of the contour rather than of the facial lineaments and body of Christ. On the other hand, the photographs, on being developed, showed a perfect representation of the face, hands, and limbs of Christ, the general effect being that of a photograph of Christ, and not of his shroud." A great sensation has been caused by this prodigy in Turin, and crowds of "pious pilgrims" are flocking to Pia's house.

ROMAN REMAINS IN SWITZERLAND.—An ancient Roman hospital has been brought to light at Baden, near Zurich, the discovery having been made in connection with recent excavations at Windisch, the Roman Vindonissa. At Vindonissa the two great Roman roads met, the one leading from the Great St. Bernard along Lake Lemane and then by Aventicum and Vindonissa to the Roman stations on the Rhine; the other leading from Italy to Lake Constance by the Kharian Alps, the canton which is now Winterthur, Baden, and Windisch. The last point was the station of the seventh and eighth legions, and close by the Roman road the hospital has been discovered. It contains fourteen rooms supplied with many kinds of medical, pharmaceutical, and surgical apparatus, the latter including probes, tubes, pins, cauterizing instruments, and even a collection of safety pins used in bandaging wounds. There are also medicine spoons in bone, and silver measuring vessels, jars, and pots for ointment, some still containing traces of the ointment used. The excavations have also revealed a large number of silver and copper coins.
